Overcoming your fear of plastic

Are the balances on your credit cards scaring you more than a Dean Koontz horror novel? Rather than avoiding the mailbox we recommend gathering all of your recent financial statements and listing the amount owed on each credit card, along with their minimum payments and interest rates. From there, establish a plan to pay off one card at a time. Though it's always fastest and most effective to pay off the highest-rate debt first, some people stay motivated by paying off their small debts completely, regardless of rate. Paying down your debt may also improve your credit score because you are using less of your available credit. McClatchy ECU offers consolidation loans at rates much lower than you are paying on your credit cards. Let us help you today.
